

Storm in the forest Animals:

Animals:

- opossum
- squirrel
- bobcat

The sleepy opossums woke up one autumn morning, stretching lazily. They looked around in search of the energetic squirrels, with which they were supposed to go for a walk today in search of new interesting places in the forest. But they couldn't find them anywhere. Instead, some bobcats emerged from the undergrowth and appeared right before the opossums. The opossums were scared and started to run away into the depths of the forest screaming: "Squirrels, squirrels, where are you?" But there was no trace of the squirrels. And the bobcats didn't let up; they ran faster and faster, almost catching up with the fleeing opossums.

Suddenly the whole group came upon a clearing, where the squirrels were quietly enjoying a breakfast of nuts. "Squirrels, squirrels!" shouted the opossums, "we're being chased by bobcats!" The squirrels were surprised. "What do you mean, chased?" they asked. "We asked the bobcats to go and fetch you and tell you where we are. We didn't want to wake you, because you were sleeping peacefully." "So the bobcats don't want to harm us? We were frightened," said the opossums. "Of course not," sighed the exhausted bobcats. After a moment's rest, the opossums, the bobcats and the squirrels made their way into the woods to look for new interesting places for games.

You can modify the story, adding and changing animals and developing the plot depending on how involved the children are in the exercise.